

History

Associate in Arts Degree

Why History?

Historians study how people in the past shaped the world around them and, long-term, impacted our lives today. They access, organize and evaluate documents such as: newspapers, oral accounts, diaries, public records, and letters. They must determine the validity, accuracy, and relevancy of sources, before use in: museum displays, classrooms, publications, government or private-sector reports, and other types of history-based work.

Why Bay College?

The History program at Bay College provides students with the opportunity to start their history studies in a supportive environment with individualized attention and smaller class sizes. In addition to the study of history for general-education purposes, students majoring in history or education will benefit from the role modeling of best-practice teaching methods, both online and on campus. Students will learn from a faculty member who is professionally trained and credentialed in the fields of history and education. So, as you can see, studying history is not just about acquiring knowledge of the past. It is about developing important life-skills to empower yourself in the present!
